Setting the Agenda Right:

Restitution Matters in Ghana

Gertrude Aba Eyifa-Dzidzienyo and Stefanie Michels talk about the urgency of material restitution of objects from Western museums to Ghana as a starting point in a longer conversation about the past and its significance for the present.

This interview is the first contribution to our new “Museums in Motion Workshop Series”. Contributions will be uploaded every Tuesday. The series curates dialogues about the future of museums and colonial collections in a global context. Conceived as a workshop, it presents conversations in an ongoing debate with scholars, curators, activists and others across space.
